ADMIRAL DEWEY DEAD; HERO OF MANILA BAY

Head of American Navy Passes Away After Illness of Few Days.

and all land batteries without the loss of a man on the American side. Immediately upon receipt of the news of the victory he was appointed rear admiral and thanked by a resolution in Congress. He was a member of the Philippine commission in 1899. In March, 1899, he was made admiral of the navy. Since that time he has been president of the Advisory Board of the Navy and has made his home in Washington. Admiral Dewey was the first admiral of the American navy in many decades, was a representative type of American and had the respect of the entire nation. His advice on all affairs of the navy was invaluable. During the tiff with Admiral Diederick, of the German Asiatic Squadron, he proved his ability as a diplomat as well as a fighter; upholding the best traditions in sea politeness. He was an authority on all things pertaining to naval construction and was extremely popular with his men. He was acquainted with Count Zeppelin, who was a guest on one of the ships of Farragut's fleet. It was during the hottest part of the engagement that Count Zeppelin was introduced to the American sea fighter. Admiral Dewey's recipe for long life was: "Never attend banquets or funerals; I never do and I attribute my health to that abstinence. One worries you and the other amuses you too much." In modern times the American navy had never had a more efficient head nor a more experienced one. Admiral Dewey was a strict disciplinarian. In 1900 he was freely mentioned as a Presidential possibility. At his request the agitation to have the hero of Manila Bay nominated for President was dropped. A veteran of the civil war, the foremost naval officer of the United States, went to his death with his hand clasped in that of his devoted wife, who had been at his bedside throughout his fatal illness. The Admiral had been unconscious for hours and his death had been expected. He had undergone great pain throughout the last two days, with the approach of death he subsided into a state of quiet coma which lasted to the end. As the president of the General Board of the Navy, ranking officer of the naval organization, lay dying in his room, official Washington besieged the house for word of his condition. President Wilson sent frequently to inquire as to how the naval hero was doing. Secretary of War Baker and Secretary of the Navy Daniels called, and Mrs. Daniels spent some time with Mrs. Dewey. The visitors were received by Admiral Dewey's aide, Lieutenant LeBreton, who remained on duty with his chief to the end. After the announcement of Admiral Dewey's death a flood of public statements of appreciation from official Washington was forthcoming. Headed by the President, the heads of government expressed their grief at the passing of one of the famous figures of American history. A flood of messages of condolence from Washington friends and from admirers of the dead hero from all parts of the country began to reach the Dewey house. The truly national regard for the man who swept the Pacific and carried the American flag to the Far East was apparent in the grief-stricken messages from high and low throughout the land. Up to the last week of his life Admiral Dewey had been one of the commanding figures in Washington. Active, alert and physically robust, he had devoted himself with fervor and with every ounce of his energy to his duties as president of the Navy General Board. He had worked for years for increased naval preparedness for war, and with the General Board had worked out a great program of naval extension. It was with profound satisfaction that he saw the nation embarked on a great program of naval defense, and he worked with all his power to aid in the inauguration of the new naval plans. Despite the 73 years which marked his birthday the day after Christmas Day, the admiral was hale and hearty. As all official Washington congratulated him on his apparently splendid physical condition and his great capacity for work, at an informal reception at his offices, he told Secretary Daniels:

British waters, after corresponding warning to the admirals. "Is not the German submarine war exclusively a reprisal against the British policy of starvation?" PARIS REGULAR PORTRESS. "Are the British ignorant of the fact that Paris was a regular fortress and was besieged by the Germans according to the laws of war?" "Do the British know that there are Russian prison camps where thousands of Germans perished miserably—camps such as Totskoi, where no less than 17,000 died?" "It is known in Europe that in several prison camps from the front were piled up on one another in front of the camps." "Why does Reuters mention the Lusitania case while it does not mention the programs at Johannesburg, London, and Moscow, the hearings and King Stephen cases, the case of Felice Pfadt, the shooting of innocent German merchants in Morocco, the assassination of an official of the German Embassy in Petrograd, Kettner, under the eyes of and with the assent of the Russian police?" "Does not the British press discuss the British proposals of 1887 about Belgium?" "Do they avoid the confession that the British cover up two interpretations of international law, according to whether it is of advantage to one or the other of her interests?" "Why did the British government prohibit the publication of reports from the Belgian ministers about the encircling policy of England?" "Is it ashamed of its own actions?"

Vogue Southern Fashion and Motor Issue Appears

The Motor and Southern Fashions number of "Vogue," well nigh redundantly illustrated and containing over one hundred pages of reading matter covering the fields of fashion, costume, society, fine arts, literature, decoration and possessing other departments of varied interests is surely a magazine which every woman should become acquainted with. It contains not only fiction features of extraordinary merit but is rich in advance fashion information and authoritative advice which insures its readers against "clothes mistakes." A few of the special features included in this month's issue include such interesting illustrated articles as "An All-over Motor Land," "Foreign Members of the Motor Aristocracy," "The New Year in the Motor World" and "Interior Decorations for Motors." All these unmentioned the usual popular sections devoted to costume, miscellaneous fashions, the Vogue pattern service, what they read, and smart fashions for limited incomes. For a whole month, or until February 15, readers have the privilege of receiving the twenty-four issues of this "class" magazine at the regular yearly subscription price of $4, but this "last chance offer" will, of necessity, be withdrawn at that time.

COMB SAGE TEA INTO GRAY HAIR

Ladies! Try This! Darkens Beautifully and Brings Back Its Gloss and Youthfulness.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea, with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use preparation improved by the addition of other ingredients, costing about 50 cents a large bottle, at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," thus avoiding a lot of fuss. While gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared. After another application or two your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant and you appear younger. Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.—Adv.
